During play, the children and their teachers in kindergarten and first grade are learning to be good citizens. The National Education Policy Institute's National Education Longitudinal Study, which followed 5,000 children from kindergarten through eighth grade, found that children who were given the opportunity to play with their peers in kindergarten and first grade were more likely to be good citizens in eighth grade than those who were not given the opportunity. The study also found that children who were given the opportunity to play with their peers in kindergarten and first grade were more likely to be good citizens in eighth grade than those who were not given the opportunity.
