

Driving away the ghosts by Manohar Khushalani

Driving away the ghosts

FOOTLIGHTS

Manohar Khushalani

Editorial

527 W 5th

A ghost hunter has been seen in the shadows of a dark room, his eyes fixed on a spot in the air. He is not alone. A crowd of people has gathered around him, some with cameras and flashlights. The scene is eerie and unsettling. The ghost hunter is a man in a dark coat, his face pale and his expression one of intense concentration. He is holding a small object in his hand, which he is looking at intently. The crowd around him is a mix of people, some looking on with curiosity and others with a sense of unease. The room is dimly lit, with the only light coming from a few scattered lamps. The atmosphere is thick and heavy, as if something is about to happen. The ghost hunter's eyes are fixed on a spot in the air, and he is holding a small object in his hand. The crowd around him is a mix of people, some looking on with curiosity and others with a sense of unease. The room is dimly lit, with the only light coming from a few scattered lamps. The atmosphere is thick and heavy, as if something is about to happen.

THE PIONEER

6, JUN 1993