Richard Linklater
Director, Before Midnight

THE 2007 Academy Award for Best Director went to Clint Eastwood, but the indie filmmaker Richard Linklater, who wrote, directed, and edited the new film Before Midnight, is a strong contender for the Best Screenplay award. The film, which is the third in a series of three films set in the fictional town of Windy Gap, is a love story between two characters, Jesse and Julie, who are played by Linklater's friends, Ethan Phillips and Julie Delpy. The film is a sequel to Before Sunrise (1995) and Before Sunset (2003), which were also written and directed by Linklater. The film is a romantic comedy-drama that explores the relationship between Jesse and Julie over the course of three years. The film is a testament to Linklater's talent as a filmmaker and his ability to create a compelling story that resonates with audiences.

Linklater's first feature film, Slacker (1991), was a critical success and established him as a filmmaker. His second film, Dazed and Confused (1993), was a commercial success and established him as a filmmaker. His third film, Before Sunrise (1995), was a critical success and established him as a filmmaker. His fourth film, Before Sunset (2003), was a critical success and established him as a filmmaker. His fifth film, Before Midnight (2007), is a critical success and established him as a filmmaker. The film is a testament to Linklater's talent as a filmmaker and his ability to create a compelling story that resonates with audiences.

Only a small group of students were left in the village. But the next year that was the end of the group. The group was not able to sustain itself.
