

Extending the Theatre Education to the Masses by Manohar Khushalani

SPECTRUM

Extending theatre education to the masses

CULTURE COOKBOOK
Manohar Khushalani

While National School of Drama has its activities and work spread over five years, the three-year programme for students is divided into two parts: the first two years are for the students to learn the basics of drama and the third year is for the students to learn the advanced aspects of drama.

The number of students admitted each year is limited to 100. The students are selected on the basis of their performance in the entrance examination. The students are then divided into two groups: the first group is for the students to learn the basics of drama and the second group is for the students to learn the advanced aspects of drama.

A few days before the entrance examination, the students are given a tour of the school and the students are given a chance to meet the faculty members and the students of the school.

to help them understand the basics of drama and the advanced aspects of drama. The students are given a chance to meet the faculty members and the students of the school.

The students are given a chance to meet the faculty members and the students of the school. The students are given a chance to meet the faculty members and the students of the school.

The students are given a chance to meet the faculty members and the students of the school. The students are given a chance to meet the faculty members and the students of the school.

