

The Grand Inquisitor

But, he was only a shadow.

He was not the Prince of Darkness

the veiled Mistress smiles gently.

She gave me an address and instructions

He lives on

The majesty of willing life-in-death in Absolute Zero

Night's Neurons

The Weaver (June 2007, Mumbai)

Betwixt waking and eternity the corridor twists and turns darkness peeps out of many doors

left ajar.

Out in the open
a man steps out of the lamplight
into the rain
he wears a long, black coat his voice is breaking and his eyes are earnest.

He drives off in a van, full of people into mortal danger
there are no digits
on the number plate.

The corridor turns like a thread for Sydney Carton on a spindle
in his weary hands.
He reeks of midnight's oil.
The rain drips off his shoulders
like a chill
into his heart
His lamp is burning and the door is shut.

Wait Until Dark (February 2014, Mumbai)

The wings of night are spreading wide the Morgul Lord unmounts his hands are cold as ice his breath
forks like a tongue a sheet of flame, twisting and unwavering his eyes the usual empty sockets

hopelessly out of sync for it is daylight that he haunts.

The night, the pristine, the undying night
keeps us safe, unmirrored
untouched
within Her bosom for if any of Her creatures should see the day be it an owl, besieged by ravens or a candle flame in a pile of amorphous wax or a student grappling with a crowd of random cadences and flashing rhythms a fastening of fancies into tens and fives and sevens and their noises, if one of us forgets a turning, strays into the deepening shadows of daylight and forgets the way, the noonday sun will have his fill and let us go and She will find us where She left us in the midnight hour.

To Swell A Progress (March 2015, Mumbai)

A voice: What will you do when you're free?
When the memory of this tiger and that no longer snarls at your gate?
When your bones have left their grating at chalkboards squeaking clean

allowing no dust particles to settle with ease at the counter dark matter
white matter in a parallel universe I answered - almost.
My eyes are tired from too little widening the muscles are stretched thin now blowing out at elliptical fault lines cavernous as hot air balloons and just as vacuous in their leaning into the bitter air.

And yet, there is a way of gentleness
a deathly stillness that rips the sky open and in between the seconds uncountable millennia leave just enough breathing room for a promised freedom.

Class (October 2001, Philadelphia Suburbs)

Your curses clamor through the walls, the crickets shrill, the boiler's rumbling grin a grin,
not quite a laugh, a grin escapes the boiler room below muscles in its chin contort in heed, in heat, to conversation's end.
Pieces of your soul are strewn like coals into this empty din.

I read between the minutes of the night freezing autumn night unquenched the boiler's heat in rhapsody, in flame in flame upon my back in chill upon my feet.

I read between the minutes of the night
your face
caught in a struggle with my swearing friend I looked at you with brave and tender eyes.

Other Poems by Acushla Sarswat

Myth of Social Media / Gouri Nilakantan

This self indulging practice that we are consumed with, becomes thus our daily practice show, our daily practice rehearsal, and our daily practice “for viewership and arduous, colossal, consumerism”.